Middle East and North Africa:

In the Middle East and North Africa (MENA), Internews works with local partners to tailor programs uniquely suited to their particular country's information needs. Internews' diverse programs include online, radio and investigative journalism trainings, as well as training on conflict-sensitive journalism. In the MENA region, Internews seeks to improve citizen awareness and involvement in community-level democracy and governance issues, as well as to empower youth to get involved in shaping the future of their countries.

Internews often works in the MENA region to support the greater involvement of women to express their civil rights. For example, in Egypt, Internews worked to ensure that women understood their rights and increased their awareness of the election process.

Information and Communications Technology (ICT) Programs:

In our ICT work, Internews supports the development of both policy and infrastructure to ensure the Internet everywhere is open, affordable, and safe so that it serves as a dynamic space for freedom of expression and access to information. Our strategy both leverages venture capital-style investment in cutting-edge technologies to enhance access, security and privacy online, including on mobile platforms, while also working with local organizations to advocate, preserve and protect online rights. Our approach involves three key pillars:

- 1) Protect the safety of all citizens, especially women and at-risk groups such as journalists, digital activists and content creators.

This frontline work is achieved through software development and distribution including via mobile devices. We also conduct digital security assessments, training, sustained mentoring and awareness-raising, each tailored to national and community norms. We provide emergency assistance services that mitigate harm and defend from future threats. We co-create community level security standards, and develop curricula that enable quality learning.

2) Support the development of secure communication tools, and increase the availability of blocked content. We conduct research on the digital security needs of journalists, activists, civil society groups, and ordinary citizens that informs our work and that of others. We support the development and adaptation of proven circumvention technology and invest in promising new tools. Internews tailors these efforts to meet the specific needs of local users around the world, and has supported the translation of educational materials into more than 20 languages so far.

3) Advocate for Internet freedom and rights: Nearly 25 countries passed laws in 2013 that dramatically restricted access to the Internet, violated users' privacy, or punished people and organizations for content. Internews works with partners in more than 15 countries to enable civil society and business sectors to seek and build better laws and regulations for an open Internet. We support the creation of transparent public policy debates, and grow local organizations' capacity and expertise to create new solutions, advocacy campaigns and coalitions.

Global Initiatives in Health, Environment and Humanitarian Crisis:

Internews supports three cross-cutting areas in its Global Initiatives programs: humanitarian crisis communication, environmental journalism, and health journalism. In humanitarian disasters people affected by the unfolding tragedy need more than physical necessities: they also have an urgent need for information. Since the 2004 tsunami in Indonesia, Internews has been building partnerships and working closely with humanitarian organizations and government agencies at all stages during emergency responses in support of our belief that information itself is a critical form of aid. Internews' innovative Earth Journalism Network (EJN) works to ensure greater coverage of climate change and broader environmental issues. Through the EJN, Internews supports networks of environmental journalists in countries where they do not exist - and builds their capacity where they do - through training workshops, the development of training materials, support for production and distribution, and the delivery of small grants to journalists covering environmental issues. Finally, in the realm of health journalism, Internews understands that the "information ecology" that we all live in is a critical component in global public health; simply put, the media play a critical role for all of us in communicating health information that can help to save lives. Working with health journalists, Internews supports effective health policy formulation, enhances accountability around public health issues, and works to reduce myths and misperceptions. Health journalists trained by Internews help to translate complex medical information into actionable information that allows people to make more informed decisions about their health.
