OUR APPROACH

We partner with local organizations to support strong, independent media and a free, open and safe Internet.

We believe that information is a master resource for personal, social and global well-being – as fundamental as food and water.

We work where information flows are restricted and with marginalized and disadvantaged groups who live with poverty, deprivation and illiteracy.

We act where there is opportunity to build healthier and more robust information environments.

We support innovation and emerging ideas that fit local needs and address gaps where markets fail.

We partner with local organizations to develop quality content and ensure people get the right information, at the right time, from sources they trust.

WE BEGIN BY LISTENING

Information Ecosystems

Our framework starts by asking questions. We map information needs, content creation and distribution as a fluid system. This approach enables us to deploy the right solutions in the right context, across a wide spectrum of challenges.

A Buddhist monk with a shaved head, wearing an orange robe, is shown in profile from the chest up. He is looking down at a tablet computer held in his hands. The background is blurred, showing what appears to be a dining table with a bowl of food and a water bottle. The overall lighting is warm and focused on the monk and the device.

GLOBAL ISSUES

Conflict Resolution

Ensuring quality information access and responsible journalism supports peace-building and helps communities come to terms with the aftermath of conflict.

Environmental Information

Supporting global media networks and enabling journalists to cover science, data and the environment more effectively.

Governance and Transparency

Advancing the free flow of news and information to foster good governance, especially in fragile democracies.

Health Information

Giving communities access to high quality information, so they can make informed decisions to improve personal and public health.

Human Rights

Supporting independent media to advance freedom of expression and produce trusted information on human rights issues.

Humanitarian Emergencies

Providing life-saving information services and communication channels so communities affected by disasters can have their voices heard and hold aid-providers to account.

Internet Freedom

Building, enhancing and advocating for a globally open Internet.

Women and Youth Voices

Advancing the leadership of women and youth in their communities through technology and media.
